

A few thoughts on Canada Day

A few thoughts after the big day, the expensive fireworks, a rubber duck floating in Lake Ontario, and the teepee in Ottawa moved at last to a more respected spot.

Oh Canada!

Yes, we marked Canada's one hundred and fiftieth year,
But there is something not to be forgotten I fear,
Nations survived here long before we white people came.
Yet, we bestowed upon this land
our claim.

We ignored these residents the right to this their land,
An egregious act to be recalled
you understand.
We number this sesquicentennial
from our arrival
And celebrate the numbered years of our survival.

This land mass is a splendid and bountiful place.
A land of mountains, plains,
waters and endless space.
We must protect the precious gifts we all now own Remembering those from whom each prize was stolen.

Canada's one hundred and fiftieth year deserved a thoughtful celebration,
And let us not forget the story of those here long before our occupation.
