

Canada 150 medals honour community's unsung heroes

By Brock Weir

They are fuelled by a passion for community, but they often put this passion in action quietly and with little fanfare. That all changed this fall, however, when Newmarket-Aurora MP Kyle Peterson honoured 150 residents of the riding with a special medal to mark a very special occasion.

The best and brightest volunteers from Newmarket-Aurora filled Northridge Community Church as one member of the community for each of Canada's 150 years was recognized for their 'unsung' heroism.

Whether they have worked behind the scenes as advocates for food security, seniors, or LGBTQ rights, each of the 150 individuals were, after a call for nominations was put out this past summer, nominated by members of the community at large for their 'outstanding volunteer service and dedication to the community.'

'We wanted people who contribute to the community on a regular basis and just help make Newmarket-Aurora a better place to live through their own volunteer efforts,' says Mr. Peterson looking back on the ceremony. 'What struck me was the number of people I hadn't heard of, the unsung heroes who were nominated. It was great to learn about so many organizations and great people in the community that a lot of people don't even know are around and all the great work people are doing.'

What struck Mr. Peterson about each of the recipients, he says, was a common refrain when he presented them with the medals themselves. More often than not they said, 'I can't believe I was nominated' or 'I don't even know why [my name] was put forward.'

'It was just the humility of people who were nominated; it just becomes such a routine and part of their daily life - their volunteer efforts, whether it was the hospital or a non-profit, or with sports teams or youth organizations, they didn't see themselves as anything special. It was just such a normal part of their daily lives they didn't realise someone else would see them as playing such an important role in our community,' he says. 'To be honest, that overwhelmed me at some points. These are the people who make our community such a great place to live.'

'I hope the people of Newmarket-Aurora realise how fortunate we are to live in a community where there are so many people who make giving back part of their daily routine and making giving back part of their lives,' says Mr. Peterson. 'I have two young children who are very active in sports and they have great coaches and great organizations that are all volunteers and we're very blessed and fortunate.

'We live in the greatest community in Canada, or one of the greatest communities in Canada, and a big part of that is the quality of the volunteers and the quantity of volunteers we have.'

Looking back over the Canada 150 commemorations in 2017, Mr. Peterson says the observances, from the Canada Day bash to Aurora's inaugural Pow-Wow served to show 'how far Canada, as a country, has come in 150 years and how much further we still have to go and what we can do.'

'Every Canadian should be proud to be Canadian and proud to be part of a country like Canada and accept the fact we have accomplished a lot but we are just beginning,' says Mr. Peterson. 'There is much more to do and many more ways to ensure Canada remains a progressive nation, a beacon to many in the world on how to get certain things right. I just think it was a great year for Canada to rally around the maple leaf and keep working hard to make the country better.'
