

Aurora's Nembhard leads Gators into March Madness berth

By Jake Courtepatte

Andrew Nembhard was given the opportunity of his lifetime in Friday's basketball game for his University of Florida Gators.

Tied at 73 points apiece with the number-one ranked LSU Tigers in the NCAA's SEC Conference quarterfinal, the Aurora native was given the ball at the top of the three-point line with just seconds remaining on the clock.

He hit nothing but net, with exactly one second remaining, to pull off the incredible upset.

The shot heard 'round the state officially sent the Gators to the prestigious NCAA March Madness tournament: something Nembhard told NCAA.com 'felt great,' to put it lightly.

'I'm just trying to stay in the moment?'it's just great to get that win for our team.?

Despite the pressures of such a monumental moment, as the underdogs in a game broadcast across Florida, the five-star point guard said he 'felt ready' for the moment thanks to 'all the hard work (he's been putting in.?

'My coaches have helped me so much, my teammates have been giving me so much confidence. So I think I was ready to step up to the plate.?

Nembhard, who attended Vaughan Secondary School through his first two years of high school before finishing out his high school career at a prep academy in Florida, is no stranger to the spotlight: he was thrust into the starting point guard position at Florida this season in just his freshman year, and has shared the court and the spotlight on plenty of occasions with former teammate R.J. Barrett, projected to go second overall in this year's NBA draft.

Yet it is the six-foot-five Nembhard, who average just over eight points per game in his first season with the Gators, who now owns the lion's share of the spotlight: and is the number-one guy on the court called on to make shots like Friday's buzzer-beater.

?When you're a kid, it's like, what you dream of doing,? said Nembhard. ?I'm just excited for it to have happened.?

After the game, Nembhard was also named to the SEC's All-Freshman team.

This year's March Madness will feature Canadian talent almost unheard of in the fan-frenzy tournament, Nembhard being one of nineteen Canadians to book a ticket to the big dance.