Charles Henry Sheppard House and Sheppard's Bush Conservation Area - 93 Industrial Parkway South

New additions to Doors Open Aurora include the Royal Canadian Legion Branch 385, the newly restored Horton Place and the Aurora Studio Tour at Victoria Hall.

The two walking tours include Creepy Tours led by David Heard leaving from Town Park at 10 a.m. and the Aurora Historical Society Walking Tour lead by Leigha Cooney leaving from the Hillary House at 2 p.m.

The Horton Place was built for Dr. Alfred Robinson and his family in 1875 and named after their ancestral home in Yorkshire, England. Dr. Robinson was a dental surgeon who worked throughout York Region. The building was purchased in 1901 by the Webster-McIntyre family and remained the same facility for over 100 years. The Horton Place is considered to be one of the best examples of Italianate Architecture in Aurora. In 2016, the Horton Place was extensively restored re-emerging as one of the true architectural gems of Aurora.

As a special event for Doors Open Aurora 2017, the Aurora Armoury will feature over 25 musical artworks by David Heard. The Great Canadian Songbook on Vinyl Returns will showcase Canada's great music history in an art gallery setting. This includes a collection of albums from many different genres.

More than half of this year's Doors Open Aurora sites are featured in the vicinity of the Southeast Old Aurora Community. Doors Open sites within this historical area include: the Aurora Armoury, the Aurora Cultural Centre and Aurora Museum & Archives, the Aurora Public Library, Victoria Hall and the Rising Sun Masonic Lodge. Many of these sites are within walking distance from one another and are in the vicinity of the Doors Open Aurora headquarters at Town Park.

Maps providing directions to each participating site will be available at the Doors Open Aurora headquarters booth at the Aurora Farmer's Market & Artisan Fair in Town Park, located at Mosley Street and Wells Street.

Don't forget to pick up a Doors Open Aurora visitor survey at one of the participating sites. Leave us your contact information and you will be entered to win a prize.
